RBNZ now expected to ease in October and November 2024

- The OCR is expected to be cut to 5.25% in the RBNZ’s October meeting.
- Westpac’s new forecasts show weaker growth and a higher unemployment rate. We think the RBNZ will be considering similar adjustments.
- The OCR is expected to be at 5% by year end and 4.5% in May 2025.
- We continue to see the OCR troughing at 3.75% in early 2026.

Official Cash Rate forecasts

Westpac’s new economic forecasts, which will be released on Tuesday with our latest Economic Overview, include significant downward revisions in the growth and inflation outlook. We now see the RBNZ starting to temper the degree of restriction from their October Monetary Policy Review by reducing the OCR by 25bp to 5.25% (previously, we expected rate reductions to begin in November).

We continue to expect a further 25bp cut in November, leaving the OCR at 5% at year end. Our longer-term forecast for the OCR is unchanged, with the OCR to fall to 4.5% at the May 2025 Monetary Policy Statement and for it to reach our current estimate of the terminal rate of 3.75% in early 2026.

Recent data suggest that economic activity dipped more sharply than previously expected in the June quarter of 2024. This is evident in a raft of higher frequency indicators such as business and consumer confidence and the Purchasing Manager Indices. We think that GDP fell 0.6% in the June quarter. Given this weak performance, it looks likely that growth will continue to be subdued in the second half of 2024.

Importantly, we now also see definitive signs that the labour market is adjusting more quickly to the weak growth profile that has been in place for some time. We now expect the unemployment rate to move more quickly to a higher peak of 5.6% in 2025. Recent data on filled jobs show this weaker trend has been firmly in place since early April and picked up in May and June.

These weaker growth and labour market trends and expectations will give the RBNZ comfort that the path of inflation towards 2% is more assured than had been the case earlier in 2024. Combined with recent softer-than-expected headline inflation outcomes – which show that the 1-3% target range will likely finally be reached in the September quarter – the RBNZ will have confidence to begin tempering the degree of restriction.

We don’t see the RBNZ panicking and embarking on a more sudden or protracted easing path. Domestic inflation remains uncomfortably high, and this will continue to worry the RBNZ. We continue to see core inflation measures falling relatively slowly – albeit more surely – in the year ahead. So, while there is certainly a case for reducing the degree of restriction, we don’t see the RBNZ being keen on getting too far ahead of itself and moving quickly toward or into easy territory. Rather, we expect the RBNZ to take a measured and data dependent approach. The future path of the OCR will be determined by the data, and not the calendar.
